Prize for Peace!

Picture the dilemma facing the Nobel committeemen who meet this fall in Oslo, Norway! In a world ringing loud with the clamor of warfare, both civil and international, they must award a peace prize to the person who has done most to advance the cause of peace during the past year. Though the slaughter in the Orient and in Spain, and the great armed legions of Italy, Germany and Russia, may hint today at the utter ineffectiveness of those who plead the cause of peace, nonetheless a peace prize is not without a purpose. It emphasizes, for one thing, that among enlightened nations peace is not without its honors. It makes clear that those who strive to advance peaceful bargaining, instead of bullets, as a just means of settling differences, are no less worthy of acclaim than fanatically aggressive warrior chieftains. Dictators, please copy!

Waterfront Truce

Today there's steam in the deck winches of ships along San Francisco's Embarcadero, slingloads are uninterruptedly hoisting cargo aboard, trucks rumble regularly up to waterfront pier sheds, and teamsters' pickets have hurried back to work. The short-lived strike, which for a time threatened to grip the port in a hammerlock as paralyzing as last year's long siege, is now over. This was a struggle by one union to capture a body of workers already affiliated with another union. Business has long since learned that such cut-throat competition for the same market, if let run unleashed long enough, ends by fatally bleeding all competitors. And the public inevitably gets billed for costs of nursing the battered, but wiser, patients back to health. Let's hope the waterfront truce will give added impetus to establishing a permanent policy of peace through arbitration and negotiation!

Tax Till

The treasury department's tax till is clattering boisterously this month, as accountants check the nation's tax receipts for 1936-37. They're finding that no small part of one of the fattest tax returns in years came from California. The bureau of internal revenue reports residents and business concerns in the Golden State paid out an average of $5 million weekly in taxes for the fiscal year 1936-37, a total of $254,174,042 for the year. California's contribution in federal taxes for the preceding year was $193,188,555—a difference that is easily, if not alarmingly, visible to the naked eye. Uncle Sam made this year's quarter of a billion dollar tax haul in California by means of no less than 122 separate levies! The internal revenue bureau expects 1936-37 collections to reach an all-time high, outdistanced only by World War levies. There may be hope—on his trip west, President Roosevelt promised a balanced budget for next year!

Sleeping Beauty

The death of Chicago's "sleeping beauty," Patricia Maguire, who nearly six years ago sank into a deep slumber from which she never awoke, was less of a surprise than the fact that medical science knows so little about the nature of her ailment. We're so accustomed to regarding medical science as an almost magical wielder of cures that its inability to isolate the virus which breeds sleeping sickness, to detect its early symptoms, or even to check them once they're evident, constitute a remarkable fact. Yet this is a tribute to medical science—that we're surprised when an affliction cannot be remedied. So this time, regrettably, medical science could not play the role of Prince Charming to the Sleeping Beauty.

America Agrees!

We Californians are famous, if not a little notorious, for the way we have chanted the praises of this state and of the Pacific coast. But the other day when a well-known magazine announced the results of a nationwide survey, it

Appreciation of Drama Discussed At Club Meeting

A program centered about the topic, "Drama Appreciation" was entertainingly presented before the Country Woman's club Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Louis Shelley, chairman, explained that she and her committee would consider the subject under three divisions and presented Mrs. T. A. Cutting who dealt with amateur theatricals, from the tiny tots' first appearance in a childish school effort, on through advancing grades and high school, and the same for plays presented by church groups.

Among many qualities fostered by participation in these efforts are poise, self control, pleasant social times, better enunciation, and dramatic technique.

The same is true of community theater groups among adults.

Miss Anne Schulte enumerated some of the more popular stage plays now on the boards in New York city and the chief actors performing in them. She also described a few of the greatest screen plays, dwelling especially upon a new one, "The Life of Emile Zola," with Paul Muni in the stellar role. Muni was the star of the two great successes, the life of "Louis Pasteur" and "Good Earth."

Mrs. Shelley had taken radio drama as her topic and briefly explained some of the requirements and restrictions which a writer of radio plays must observe. She also explained the term, "prestige plays," naming several.

Mrs. Marshall Ross and Miss Jessie Lewis read a play written by Richard Shelley, who has had a number of his plays enacted on "First Nighter" broadcasts. This one, "Not Without Honor," was interesting and fast moving as they must be for radio production.

At the opening of the hour Mrs. J. E. Norin successfully directed the group singing of three old songs.

Mrs. R. H. Hyde, who presided over the business session, called for reports from the committees who had been in charge of the enlargements and improvement made in the kitchen during the summer. These were designed especially to make the hall more rentable and so increase the revenues to help finance the institution.

The club voted to pay its share of the county federation student loan fund by a voluntary per capita assessment.

Mrs. Freeman Howes, who has accepted the county chairmanship of the committee on highways and water ways, reported on the recent county meeting in Gilroy.

The program committee had arranged attractive bouquets of lions tails, orange flare, cosmos, and a grouping of pastel pink lilies, single asters and other dainty flowers.

Miss Dorothy Mills Weds at San Diego

Miss Dorothy Mills, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mills, was married Sept. 22 to W. L. Harrison, son of Mrs. Hazel Harrison, of Atlanta, Ga.

The ceremony was performed in the presence of friends in the 1st Presbyterian church in San Diego and were attended by W. H. Davis, a shipmate of the groom.

Mrs. Harrison plans to visit here in November, as her father's estate is being settled.

Dorothy is a Campbell girl and a graduate of the local schools. Her many friends here extend best wishes.

appeared that the enthusiastic feeling California has for the coast is based on something sounder than sectional pride. The survey revealed the majority of Americans would sooner live on the Pacific coast than anywhere else in the United States. This survey sampled public sentiment in New England, the south, middle west, and the north central states. California's booster spirit may at times have soared to excessively high peaks, but its premises were sound. We have added proof on that—now that the rest of America has vindicated our judgment!

Lightweights Meet Mt. View Friday Night

By Don Martin
Campbell high's 110 and 120 basketball teams are scheduled to clash with Mt. View here Friday evening at 7:30. The two schools split both of the lightweight titles last year so there is certain to be plenty of spirit behind the play in both games.

Although the local 110's are inexperienced and show no signs of being a "wonder team," they believe in the proverb "where there's a will there's a way," and their plentiful supply of "will" should show to good advantage for them tomorrow night. Coach Ralph Nordin announced the following starting line-up: Ted Tomihiro, center; Don Murphy, forward; Roy Kawahara, forward; George Silva, guard and Alvin Van Every or Eddie Wada, guard.

Campbell's 120's are an unknown quantity, but it is believed that they will be strong enough so that when the final bell sounds the Mt. View "Eagles" will know that they have been through a game of basketball. Paul Borg and Charles Silcot, both veterans of last year's 110 team, are expected to lead the team from their respective positions at center and forward. Starting for the locals will be Paul Borg at center, Teddy Aritomi, Bill Silcot or Jerry Waltrip, forwards; Charles Silcot, forward; Don O'Hare and Mac Pluck, guards.

Two thrilling contests are anticipated and all are invited to attend these first valley league games. Admission is 25 cents.

Chauncey Watson Injured in Wreck

Chauncey Watson, who was substituting as rural mail carrier yesterday suffered bad cuts and abrasions of the face, and chest injuries in an auto accident.

Coming toward Campbell on Rincon avenue, he was arranging some mail and the auto wheels ran off the pavement. In returning to the pavement the supposition is that he gave the car too much "gas" and before he could straighten out, it hit the abutment on the bridge at the turn of the road.

He was brought to Dr. Merrill's office where he was treated for cuts and bruises. He seemed in fair condition, but having suffered severely in the past from head injuries, the accident may prove more hazardous in his case.

Mr. and Mrs. William Finnemore of Campbell and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Finnemore of San Jose returned Tuesday evening from Vancouver, B. C., where they had attended the funeral of a sister-in-law, Mrs. Charles Finnemore. They remained in the Canadian city for ten days and were accompanied upon their return by their brother, the Rev. Charles Finnemore, who will have a three-weeks rest before resuming his duties.

Chino-Japanese Situation Topic At Kiwanis Meet

The Kiwanis club was treated to an especially interesting and scholarly talk at its last meeting when Dr. George Bruntz of the Los Gatos high school discussed the Chino-Japanese situation as it affects the United States. The speaker was presented by G. E. Farley, chairman.

The meeting next Tuesday will be presided over by Mark E. Purmort, and reports of the California-Nevada district convention now in session in Sacramento, will be the order of the day.

This morning, Mr. and Mrs. Purmort, Ralph Hyde and Ira Abbott left for the capital city. This afternoon Jack Murdock, G. E. Farley and C. P. Klassen will join the procession headed the same way, and C. B. Field and Mr. and Mrs. Hedegard plan to go Friday.

The run-off election resulted in S. N. Hedegard and E. R. Kennedy being chosen directors, and Jack Murdock was appointed by the board to serve as secretary.

Grammar PTA Meets Tuesday

The first fall meeting of the grammar school P. T. A. was held Tuesday afternoon with the president, Mrs. E. A. Howe, presiding. There were more than 100 members and friends in attendance.

Rev. J. H. Bennett presented a group of Cub Scouts who led in salute to the flag.

The chairmen of the various committees for the year were introduced, and each responded with a few words.

Mrs. Howe gave a brief report of the Sixth district meeting held recently in San Jose.

The association voted to sponsor the Cubs again this year, as it has done in the past two years.

A clothes drive will be conducted during the next month, for the benefit of needy children. Anyone having clothes they would care to donate may send them in by any grammar school child.

A study group is soon to be formed, and anyone interested should attend the meeting for discussion, Tuesday, Oct. 12, at 3 o'clock in room 9 or call Mrs. Ray Wood, Campbell 16F4.

At the close of the meeting delicious refreshments were served by the executive board in the cafeteria where Principal Ira Abbott introduced the members of the faculty, and each teacher was presented with a corsage.

William Trigwell and daughter Ileen left early this morning by motor for Toronto, Canada, where they will spend a few days with relatives. From there they will go by train to New York to embark on a Holland-American liner for England. They will visit with relatives in England for two months or more.

Community Circus Begins To Shape Up

Plans for the indoor community circus began to take definite and concrete form at the meeting held last night.

Arrangements for side shows, concessions and acts were all outlined and work in connection with several of them allotted.

Herold Morton, general manager, has spent a lot of time in getting the foundation work done and his committeemen should meet with hearty cooperation from those asked to help put on the show or assist with some of the other activities.

It was decided to have only two shows, Friday and Saturday evenings, Nov. 12 and 13.

Twenty-five cent tickets, printed for a matinee, will be recognized at either evening performance for grammar school children, and high school students if accompanied by a student body card.

Joins Staff of Jones Station; In Budget Dept.

T. F. Alley, familiarly known as "Buck," formerly with the Goodrich Tire company and residing in Los Gatos, is now affiliated with the Jones service station.

Alley is manager of the budget department and radio sales, on the time payment plan.

The Jones service station at the corner of Campbell avenue and Winchester road is one of the busiest spots in the community, and its increasing business has necessitated the additional help.

Alley will act as an outside salesman as part of his duties with the firm.

Local Gridders To Battle Mt. View Here Fri.

By Don Martin

"How good is Campbell high's football team this year?" That is the question which local grid fans are asking, and that is the question which will be answered when the Campbell eleven goes through an acid test at the hands of Mt. View, valley league title defender, in the opening contest of the season here Friday afternoon.

If the scrimmage with Montezuma is any indication of Campbell's strength, the locals should have a very successful season and be able to put up a good game against Mt. View, rated by many as tops in the league. Several observers picked the Orchard City boys to win in tomorrow's contest, pointing to the fact that the Eagles have lost all but a few members of their invincible team of 1936, while Campbell has gained much promising new material in addition to their veterans. Another point in the locals' favor is a new coach who all the players agree "knows his business."

Although refusing to say yes or no on victory, Coach Steve Casaleggio commented that his squad would be out there to make touchdowns and not just play to keep the other team's score down. In spite of having Charles Prestagiacomo, 200-pound freshman on the line, the line on the whole is rather light, averaging about 150 pounds. Because of this weakness a passing attack will be used. This should make a spectacular game for the throng of fans expected to attend. The kick-off is slated for 3 o'clock.

The starting line-up will be as follows: John Bogner, left end; Robert Ashcraft, left tackle; Mark Klitchen, left guard; Nick Pisano, center; Raymond Swanson, right guard; Charles Prestagiacomo, right tackle; Bert Robinson, right end; Frank Andrews, quarter; George Azevedo, right half; Kaleb Borg, left half, and Don Karnagei, fullback.

A marriage license was issued Monday to George Becker of Los Gatos and Estella Lanz of Campbell. Mrs. Lanz is the widow of the late Elic Lanz and has resided in Campbell for a number of years.

Sunnyvale, Los Gatos Interesting Examples In Corporate Picture

Considerably Larger Than the Orchard City, These Two Have Tax Rates Comparable To Those of Towns Which Have Here Been Reviewed.

Apparently the size of the town and its assessed valuation mean little in determining the size of the tax rate if an incorporated community goes in for all the "trimmings." That is the conclusion one jumps at after scanning the tax rates of Morgan Hill $1.60, and Pleasanton, $1.40, with Sunnyvale, a much larger city coasting along between the two with a rate of $1.48 on an assessed valuation of $1,962,425. However, Sunnyvale's "comparability" need not cease there, for she has practically the same civic set-up as have Morgan Hill and Pleasanton, with a larger community to serve, a civic center project, and about the same disbursements for bond interests and redemption, the odd .48 going into this fund.

In the Sunnyvale city budget for 1938 total expenses of $28,956.75 are offset by tax revenues amounting to $29,043.75. Other revenues such as licenses contribute to the reduction of expense at various points in the budget.

The general fund, which includes salaries of the city officials, maintenance of city hall and grounds, telephone etc., amounts to $6,955 (less estimated revenue from licenses—$3500), or $3,455.

Fire, police and health expenditures are $9,325 including $5,400 in salaries and $1,500 for fire department incidentals; also covers insurance, telephone, maintenance, etc. and is partially offset by an estimated revenue of $700 in fines.

Streets account for $7,544.25, bond fund, $7,332 and library $2,000. (The bond fund includes current payment on the following: water, water extension, sewer, sewer extension, fire protection and civic center bonds.)

It is significant to note that the real progress of the city of Sunnyvale dates from its incorporation 25 years ago revealed in the following paragraphs from a recent issue of the Sunnyvale Standard:

"The tax rate for the city of Sunnyvale was set at $1.48 at an adjourned meeting of the city council (Continued on Page 5)

Church Choir Reorganized

The choir of the Congregational church was reorganized last evening for the winter's work. Sixteen members, many of them from the young people's groups, were enrolled.

Regular rehearsals will be held on Thursday evenings under the direction of C. P. Klassen, who plans some interesting musical programs when the group has become coordinated.

Farley on Frosh Council at State

Tom Farley, a June graduate of Campbell high school was elected to the San Jose State college freshman council for the ensuing year.

Farley was an outstanding member of the Campbell student body during his four years at the school. He was president of his freshman, sophomore, junior and senior classes, president of the student body, an organizer of the Hi-Y club a prominent athlete, and sports editor of the school annual.

Mrs. J. M. Murdock and baby Sharron, accompanied by Mrs. Ray Mathis, left for Georgetown this morning to visit Mrs. M. Murdock for the remainder of the week.

Mr. and Mrs. Schoenbaechler, who have been staying in San Jose since their arrival in June, are to be guests of their cousin, Ralph E. Nordin next week. On the 22nd of the month they will return to their home in Philadelphia, Pa.

Bar for Free Courts

CONVINCED that the independence of the federal judiciary is still threatened, despite the defeat of the plan to enlarge the Supreme court, the American Bar association, in session in Kansas City, voted unanimously to authorize a committee to keep up the fight to preserve the freedom of the courts, as recommended by a special committee. That committee said: "There appears to be no likelihood that efforts to re-make the courts of the United States will not be renewed. Your special committee is of the opinion that the association ought to maintain itself in readiness to meet such issues as they may recur, rather than to rely upon impromptu organization for the purpose."

The lawyers listened to many speeches, both attacking and defending President Roosevelt's court program and his appointment of Hugo Black to the Supreme court. The climax to all this came when Hatton W. Summers of Texas, chairman of the house judiciary committee, arose to talk. He had a prepared address, but shifted to an extemporaneous talk in which he declared the people have lost control of the government of the United States and it has passed into the hands of a million people in its executive department, in which only one man was elected, and which the people could not control.

"What are we going to do about it?" Summers cried. "Are you willing to join a battalion of death to save the Constitution and the government?"

"As we look to the future, we are rapidly approaching a crisis when it will be decided whether our economic system and our government will stand or fall."

"I mean actually. A very serious situation is before the people. It means we have got to do something soon. We have got to balance the budget. We have got to decentralize government responsibility."

Cumings Hasn't Quit Fight

ATTORNEY GENERAL CUMINGS in his press conference intimated strongly that the administration intends to push for the court reforms the President has demanded. To support this position he produced the annual report of the chief justice and senior circuit judges. It recommended appointment of 16 additional federal judges. "In this report," said Mr. Cumings, "the judiciary has capitulated. They admit now there is congestion and delay in the judicial system. They ask for additional judges to provide relief. This is a complete capitulation and a welcome one."

O'Mahoney Butts In

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, on the way to Seattle, first entered the "enemy's" country when he crossed the border of Wyoming, the state of Senator Joseph O'Mahoney, leader of the anti-Supreme court enlargement forces. Mr. Roosevelt's train reached Cheyenne in the early morning, and there, among the welcomers, was Joseph, though he had pointedly not been invited to board the train. He walked alongside the President's car and Mrs. Roosevelt emerged, shook his hand and asked after Mrs. O'Mahoney.

The senator then entered the private car and he and Mr. Roosevelt shook hands and said "Hello," but the atmosphere was decidedly chilling; he took leave of the party at Casper, Wyo., after accompanying the President and his group on a drive about that city.

The Chief Executive spent two days in Yellowstone National park, and then went on to Boise, Idaho; to the Bonneville dam near Portland, and thence to Seattle.

After a pleasant visit with his grandchildren, Mr. Roosevelt boarded the destroyer Phelps and went to Victoria, B. C., for a "good neighbor" call on Lieutenant Governor Hamber.

His schedule thereafter included a night at Lake Crescent, Wash., a drive around the Olympic peninsula ending at Tacoma, and then the eastward trip with stops at Grand Coulee and Fort Peck dams, Grand Forks, N. D., and St. Paul, and a few hours in Chicago to dedicate the new Boulevard bridge over the mouth of the Chicago river.

Soviet Helping China?

JAPANESE officials in Shanghai asserted they had learned that Marshal Galens - Bluecher, commander of the Russian Far East armies, was directing the Chinese campaign against Japan by telephone from his Siberian headquarters.

According to Domei, the Japanese news agency, munitions and other military supplies are being transported by trucks into China across the province of Sinkiang from Soviet Siberia. If these reports are true it may be Stalin has decided the time has come for Russia to take sides with China openly, and that would make things tough for the Japanese invaders.

Russia Warns Japan

TOKYO officially notified Moscow that the Chinese were plotting to attack the Russian embassy in Nanking with planes disguised as Japanese aircraft, for the purpose of involving the Soviet government in the Sino-Japanese conflict. With the equivalent of "Oh, yeah?", Russia retorted with a stern warning that it would hold Japan responsible for any bombing of the embassy, intentional or accidental. The Soviet officials said they considered the reported plot a "pure prevarication showing the intention of some Japanese military powers to bombard the Soviet embassy intentionally and then try to escape responsibility."

With callous brutality Japan continued the air raids on Nanking, Canton and other large Chinese cities, the bombs slaughtering thousands of helpless civilians. The utter contempt for protests of western nations shown by Japan seemed warranted by the failure to insist on respect for the nine-power treaty guaranteeing the territorial integrity of China. For this failure Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek blames especially the United States. "This war," said he, "will last as long as Japanese aggression lasts in China."

The League of Nations adopted a resolution severely condemning Japan for the aerial bombardment of defenseless Chinese cities, and Tokyo, indignant, charged the league of acting without verifying the facts. To the protests of five great powers, previously filed, the Japanese government replied with the assertion that the bombing of Nanking was "necessary for our purpose."

The British public is becoming increasingly aroused against Japan and there is a general demand for a boycott of Japanese goods. The government has permitted an aircraft company to take a big order for fighting planes that will soon be shipped to China, and they may be manned by independent British pilots.

Yarnell's Policy Wins

ADMIRAL HARRY YARNELL was decidedly opposed to the policy of Washington to withdraw American warships from Chinese waters in the face of danger. His protests have been considered by the general board of the Navy department and his program approved. Consequently our naval vessels will remain there to protect our nationals "as long as the present controversy between China and Japan exists."

Auto Union Shake-Up

SEVERAL times Homer Martin, president of the United Automobile Workers of America, has intimated that there were too many radicals among the leaders of that union. Now, allegedly for reasons of economy, he has got rid of some of them. These organizers have been let out: Victor Reuther, one of the leaders in the General Motors strike at Flint, Mich., last winter; Robert Kanter, Stanley Novak, Melvin Bishop and William Tonn of Detroit; R. D. Richter of Saginaw; Charles Rigby, Ohio; Frank McMillan, Kansas City; Eugene Stauder, Frank Bartee and Frank Schutz, Indiana.

Martin also announced he had promoted Loren Houser to be organizational director for Detroit. Elmer Dowell was made director of all General Motors locals in the nation. R. J. Thomas, international vice president, has been appointed director of all Chrysler locals, and Richard T. Frankenstein, director of the organization program among Ford Motor company employees.

Lester Washburn of Lansing, Mich., leader of the "labor holiday" last spring, was made director of the U. A. W. for western Michigan, and Charles Madden, Pontiac, director of eastern Michigan outside of Detroit.

Italy Wins "Parity"

GREAT BRITAIN and France yielded to the demands of Mussolini and granted "parity" to Italy in the anti-piracy patrol of the Mediterranean. That sea was divided into three zones. The Italian zone includes the extensive Italian coast line, the Tyrrhenian sea around Sardinia and, in the east, the coast of the Libyan colony. The Aegean sea is assigned to Britain; and France will guard the Syrian coast and the sea lane between Marseilles and Algiers.

All three zones extend east to the Suez canal since all three powers are interested in keeping open that gateway to the East.

War Dance for Duce

BENITO MUSSOLINI, visiting Adolf Hitler for the purpose of composing and presenting to the world a statement of the intentions and demands of the Italian and German governments, was received by the Nazis with great enthusiasm. Il Duce, on the way to Berlin, stood on a hill in Mecklenburg with Hitler and witnessed a big war dance staged by the reichsfuehrer that displayed the regained military might of Germany most impressively.

Hitler's best officers and troops, armed with the latest weapons of death, put on a sham battle participated in by all land and air forces. In the nearby Baltic the German warships showed how they chase "Red" submarines; and at Wustrow the anti-aircraft batteries gave a demonstration of their effectiveness. The huge munitions plants in the Ruhr district were visited and the throngs of workers, given a holiday with pay, cheered the two dictators heartily. Every city and village was decorated. In Berlin there were tremendous demonstrations and elaborate festivities in honor of the visitor from Rome.

In the midst of the display of war strength and preparedness, Hitler and Mussolini made speeches declaring their devotion to the cause of peace. At the same time they insisted the world must grant to Germany and Italy the recognition and the rights they feel are their due.

After a grand review of the Nazi army, the two dictators conferred privately. Details of the conversation were kept secret, but officials said Il Duce and Der Fuehrer not only discussed German-Italian cooperation but also talked about an understanding in southeastern Europe—the inclusion of Austria, Hungary, Jugoslavia, Bulgaria, and possibly Rumania in a general European realignment.

Noted Merchant Dies

EDWARD A. FILENE, best known of all Boston's merchants, died of pneumonia in the American hospital in Paris. He was seventy-seven years old. Besides being a business man, Mr. Filene was a noted social economist. He was sometimes called the apostle of mass production and distribution. Only ten days after he took charge of the American legation in Vienna, Greenville T. Emmet died of double pneumonia. He was sixty years old and was a former law partner of President Roosevelt. He was minister to the Netherlands in 1933 and was given the Austrian post last July.

More Woo in Palestine

GREAT BRITAIN'S contested plan to divide Palestine between the Jews and the Arabs, with a slice for herself, came to the front again when Lewis Andrews, British commissioner of Galilee, was assassinated by a group of terrorists in Nazareth. Three men, two in European garb and one in peasant clothing, ambushed Andrews and shot him and his bodyguard to death.

Andrews had gained the enmity of extremists because of the strictness of his rule as district commissioner.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—Some weeks ago when the Treasury was parading a lot of names of well known individuals before a joint congressional tax committee, I discussed the purposes of the investigation and reached the conclusion that the whole affair was staged. If I remember correctly, I called it a vaudeville stunt, designed by the Treasury to save its face for having made bad guesses as to tax collections. The tax collections, as everyone knows, were much below New Deal estimates and somebody had to be the goat. So, it was natural to make rich men the goat by calling them tax evaders.

At the same time, I reported to you the fact that there was a difference of opinion among Treasury subordinates. Some of them wanted to make a great show of names of individuals who had resorted to practices not prohibited by law in order to reduce their taxes. I did not know at that time how serious the disagreement was within the Treasury. It has only lately come out into the open. As a result, two important Treasury officials have quit their jobs and have gone back to private life. I refer to Morrison Shafroth and Russell I. Ryan, chief counsel, and assistant chief counsel, respectively, of the bureau of internal revenue. These two men know more about tax evaders and tax avoiders than anybody else in the Treasury but they had one grievous fault. They wanted to be honest about the whole situation. That was a fault because being honest did not make possible a flamboyant display of hatred for taxpayers who had employed legitimate means to pay as little tax as the law permitted.

As far as I can ascertain, Messrs. Shafroth and Ryan wanted to cooperate fully with the higherups in the Treasury in so far as a tax investigation by a joint congressional committee would point the way for improvement of the law. They knew, as many others know, that the internal revenue laws have holes in them. The smart lawyers and smart taxpayers naturally have taken advantage of these holes in the law because they are human despite the fact they are rich. So, the chief counsel and his assistant proposed to Secretary Morgenthau and Treasury General Counsel Herman Oliphant that the investigation be made along lines of a scientific character, that close study be given to some of the methods that had been employed to avoid taxes. In other words, Shafroth and Ryan were anxious to develop legislation on the basis of the experiences which they had had and loopholes they had found to be in common use. But their fault was honesty, as government officials would not be denied the vaudeville performance and the columns upon columns of publicity which Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Oliphant, not to mention President Roosevelt, desired to see.

I stayed through all of the hearings before the joint congressional committee. They ran for fourteen days. Each day the Treasury trotted out another official as the witness before the committee and he was armed with a prepared statement which he read for some two hours to a committee that sat back in easy chairs and smoked cigars in comfort—while newspaper men avidly wrote stories about rich men, some good and some bad, who had committed the heinous sin of paying as little tax as the law permitted.

The resignations of Shafroth and Ryan rather convince me that the Treasury stooped to about the lowest level it has reached in recent years. Of course, it was not the first time in our history that income tax has been used for political intimidation. Reprisal is a strong word to use about government officials but I cannot escape the feeling that the Treasury used that investigation as a method of reprisal against many men who had opposed the New Deal.

I reach that conclusion on the basis of a review of the names which Messrs. Shafroth and Ryan refused to parade before the committee but which the Treasury itself used as the principal actors. Not more than three of the eighty-odd names presented to the committee had contributed to the Democratic national campaign fund a year ago. The tactics were not far from those employed by the late Huey Long in enforcing his will upon the people of Louisiana.

I can add to this a statement of the fact that Under-Secretary Magill, who had charge of presenting the so-called evidence before the committee at the capitol, believed the Treasury was not following an entirely wise course in the methods it employed. But Mr. Magill went along with the scheme and there were many of the correspondents covering that hearing who felt he tried to do the job fairly.

So now Morrison Shafroth and Russell Ryan are back in private life and in their places are men picked by Mr. Oliphant, men who are likely to obey orders regardless of the whims of Mr. Oliphant and Secretary Morgenthau.

Another instance of official action that seems to indicate a bad trend in government lately has occurred. This incident was propagated by the federal power commission, one of the numerous federal agencies that is supposed to be largely judicial in character but which is equipped at the same time with administrative powers.

The facts are these: There was a group of men who served as directors of the Associated Gas and Electric company. These same individuals were directors for numerous corporations that are subsidiaries of that same company.

The federal power act provides that the commission may require directors of one power company to divest themselves of connection with any other power companies—one of the strongest features of the law. The commission is empowered to make its own investigation of these interlocked directorates and then on its own motion may require such directors to appear and give the commission satisfactory reasons why they are holding places on the boards of more than one corporation. This also is a sound provision of law and undoubtedly works to the benefit of all consumers of light and power.

Before I proceed further, let it be definitely understood that I have not a great deal of respect for the Associated Gas and Electric company. Its record does not warrant my respect as an observer. Undoubtedly, however, its management complies with the terms of its corporate charter but as a great public utility it has obligations to the public beyond the terms of its charter and it is my opinion that the moral obligations are such that this age demands full observation of them.

This brings us to the crux of the power commission action. Late in September Vice Chairman Seavey of the commission had ordered the group of directors referred to above to show cause why they should not be compelled to relinquish various positions on other boards of directors. A hearing date was set. A few days before the hearing date, the directors in question resigned the positions to which the commission objected and then their attorney issued a statement which said, in effect, that they had resigned because they were convicted in the minds of the commission before the commissioners had heard the case. He used rather strong language, perhaps too strong in expressing his views.

Upon publication of the attorney's statement, Vice Chairman Seavey promptly ordered him to appear before the commission to give his reasons for the statement and to defend himself against disbarment from practice as a lawyer before the commission.

Now, lest I be misunderstood, I do not know the attorney, Mr. Paxson; I know nothing about the merits of the case in question. But it is significant that an agency of the government suddenly decides that it can prevent a man from earning his living because he criticized members of that agency.

Occasionally, situations develop in national politics that provide a real laugh. One of them is not at hand. It results from the nasty controversy that swirls around the head of Hugo Black of Alabama, newly appointed associate justice of the Supreme court, who is charged with being a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

Terrible as is the charge and worse if it eventuates that Mr. Justice Black still is subject to the oath of the invisible empire, there is humor in the way a lot of senators and other government officials are running to cover. It has been almost a scramble among Democratic senators to let the public know by issuing statements that they would not have voted for Senator Black's confirmation as a member of the court if they had known he was a klansman. It makes one laugh again when one recalls how carefully the majority of the Democrats in the senate refused to hear evidence or hold any sort of a hearing concerning Mr. Black's qualifications. They did this by voting down a motion for hearings.

It is not pleasant to contemplate how the senate so many times passes on judicial appointments with the carefree abandon of a boy on his way home from school.

Home Heating Hints

By John Barclay
Heating Expert

Have Your Furnace Cleaned and Inspected Now Before the Cold Weather Comes Along.

HERE'S a straight money-saving tip: Before starting your heating plant this fall, be sure it's thoroughly vacuum cleaned. It is one of the greatest precautions you can take to insure its most economical operation during the winter ahead.

When the heating surfaces are covered with as little as one-sixteenth of an inch of soot (which acts as an insulator against heat, being five times as effective as asbestos) it wastes fully one-quarter of every ton of coal you burn! What's more, a furnace caked with dirt and dust won't deliver nearly as much heat as a clean furnace will.

Call in a competent service man now and arrange for a thorough vacuum cleaning of your furnace. He will do the job without muss or inconvenience.

While he's doing that, have him check up the whole heating system from flue to ashpit—guard against any possible failure of the plant after cold weather sets in. I know you'll find the cost is little compared with the staggering cost of the fuel that a dirty, faulty plant is sure to waste! Every home-owner wants to save and not waste his fuel dollars!

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nationwide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Shasta Dam Contract Awarded
Sacramento.—Bureau of Reclamation officials awarded to Nels A. Anderson, Los Angeles contractor, a $12,200 contract for constructing a bureau office building at the Central Valley Water Project dam-site.

Son of Il Duce in Hollywood
Hollywood.—Vittorio Mussolini, blond 20-year-old son of Italy's dictator and a war ace in his country's flying corps, arrived here to study motion picture manufacture. Of California he said: "It seems like my Italy. I think California is very beautiful."

To Rescue Trapped Fish
Tulare.—Several thousand small black bass which have been trapped in receding pools in the St. Johns river are dying, as the stagnant pools evaporate. Steps are being taken to have State game wardens rescue the fish and place them in other streams or reservoirs.

Cooney To Run Against McAdoo
Los Angeles.—Patrick J. Cooney, vice-chairman of the Los Angeles County Central Democratic Committee and one of the original Roosevelt-for-President supporters, announced his candidacy for United States Senator. Cooney became the first avowed opponent of Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, whose term expires next year.

Farmer Killed by Deer Hunter
Yreka.—While hunting deer Jess Gingham, 50-year-old farmer of Etna, was killed when shot accidentally by an eighth-grade school boy. Authorities did not immediately learn the name of the boy but said the lad reported he and a friend shot at a moving bush 100 feet away, thinking a deer was hiding in it.

Hollister Schools Bank Home Work
Hollister.—Students in the local schools breathed a collective sigh of relief when it was announced that there will be no more home work. Clarence Britnell, city superintendent of schools, said a system has been worked out whereby study periods will follow periods of recreation in the day time, during which all home work will be done.

Ruth Roland Will Filed
Los Angeles.—One half of the estimated $1,000,000 estate of Ruth Roland, star of silent screen thrillers who died last week, will go to her husband, Ben Bard, producer and former actor, under a holographic will written last August 18. One paragraph in the will specifies that all of her diaries be burned and that her collection of autographed books go to Bard.

Dead Warden Honored by Prisoners
Sacramento.—Among the hundreds of floral offerings at the funeral of Clarence E. Larkin, slain warden of Folsom Prison, was a huge spray of delicate white flowers with this poignant message: "To Our Warden." It was sent by the prison's convicts, hardened "two-time losers," who refused to participate in the riot led by seven convicts in which the warden was slain.

Coed Smoking O. K.'d at San Jose
San Jose.—Smoking by coeds was given official sanction on the San Jose State College campus for the first time with the opening of a new student union building here. The college authorities agreed with the students who expressed their opinion in a specially conducted poll, that the new union building designed to be a student club house would be of little use if coeds and men alike did not enjoy it.

Cypress Trees Threatened
San Francisco.—Complete extinction of the world famous California cypress due to an incurable fungus is a possibility cited by the federal forest service. Known to have existed for the last ten years, the fungus has made a steady invasion despite the defense set up by foresters and the CCC. If the fungus is discovered in its early stages, surgery may halt its spread. But if the infection is well advanced, the only recourse is to cut down the tree to prevent spread of the disease to other trees. The fungus has made serious progress on the Monterey Peninsula, the only place where the California cypress is native, and has spread northward almost to San Francisco. Forest service officials said all of the cypress groves are doomed unless the spread of the disease is checked.

Forest Deputy Jailed for Fires
Salinas.—Neal C. Cornwall, Jr., 21-year-old deputy fire warden in Los Padres National Forest, wasn't winning promotion fast enough, so he set out to do something about it. It was a good idea, but he overdid it a little. Cornwall admitted before Justice William A. Breen that he had set numerous fires and quickly extinguished them to win advancement, and was sentenced to serve 180 days in the county jail and pay a $500 fine.

Make Your Own Lace Accessories

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MISS COLLEGE GIRL, Miss Debutante and matrons young and not so young who being active in social affairs need must "dress up" to occasion, here's telling you how to economically acquire that air of elegance which fashion demands for this fall and winter. No matter how ungenerous your clothes allowance may happen to be you can have a whole collection of lace "pretties" such as the sketches here show at comparatively trifling cost. In fact the idea that prompts this illustration, together with its story, is to give you "pointers" on dressing smartly and handsomely on a limited allowance.

A touch of lace will do it! Transform your simplest demure and unpretentious gown into a costume of distinction. And now that we've told you, the first step is either to let your favorite dressmaker in on the secret (show her these sketches) or perhaps you prefer to thriftily adopt the "make it yourself" course of action. Not that you have to be an expert with the needle, for, provided with carefully selected patterns, there is no reason why, if you can sew even a little bit, that you should not successfully copy these charming fantasies. No matter how many you make of these lovely lace items you can't ever have too many.

Here's a word of friendly advice: don't stint in getting the best type laces for the finer and more exquisite the lace you use in making these dainty fashions the more conclusively will they carry a message of high-style prestige.

If you are clever and have a knack of your own a pattern will not be necessary for the cape for it is cut along simple circular lines. However, a pattern similar to the model shown should be easily available. It has little tailored epaulet effects on the shoulders and cunning wee buttons with tiny thread-crochet loops to fasten it down the front. You can get it hemstitched about the edge or finish with roll hem. As an evening wrap this cape of black Chantilly may be worn over the fashionable all-black gown or over the dress done in lovely pastels.

Have you heard the news about the stunning blouse and skirt or jacket and skirt formals that designers are featuring this season? They are quite the talk in fashion realms. The jacket is supposed to be of sumptuous fabric or lace in contrast color to the monotone skirt. Choose black lace if you want it to "go with everything," although metal lace is wonderfully effective, or if you cherish a color scheme why not a lace jacket in the new spruce green with a crepe skirt in darker rich green, or suppose we say any color just so the jacket is lace? It is no trick at all to get a simple basque-jacket pattern of the type pictured and it will be found easy to make.

The little white cotton lace bolero is very popular and it can be made up so inexpensively it is worth while to keep two or three in waiting for emergency calls. Wear it over simple afternoon dresses or over a floor length crepe sheath which transforms it into an evening ensemble. Jeff of London has made an effective accessory ensemble of black Chantilly lace. (See sketch to right bottom.) The jabot with its high neckline matches a pair of gaunlets of the same black Chantilly, and together they give the essential feminine look to the most tailored of suits.

BRIDLE-PATH CHIC

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

To dress up to the part she plays should be the ambition of every true sportswoman. It may be along scenic bridle paths that the enthusiast guides her gallant steed or it may be in the glare of bright light and trumpet loud in the fashionable horse show arena that she will make her bow. In either event her riding togs must be correct down to the slightest detail. The picture shows a sartorially perfect outfit. We would especially call your attention to the horse's head carved from brown shell catlin that is nonchalantly pinned on her coat. During the summer it became quite a fad to wear novel carved catlin fish, frogs, snails and such, either clips or brooches, on one's bathing suit

SILHOUETTE TRENDS FOR EVENING DRESS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Outside of that the pencil-slim Directoire with its high slit skirt and the revival of the Empress Eugenia, there is a definite tendency in many houses to a Spanish type of dress. This is usually marked by flounce ruffles. And one must not forget the gently widened skirt as evidenced also in the afternoon clothes. The most startling bit of material used in this has been the placing of various types of lace over lame to give the firmness and stiffness required. One more skirt—and the silhouette can be settled. That is the short front. This varies from the gradation effect to those cut off clear to the knees in front to show a filmy petticoat of ruffled net. A cross between this and the Directoire are skirts which are cut away like a man's coat, to the knees and then come down to the ground at either side seam.

Daytime Footwear for Fall

Loses Rugged Sporty Look

Most daytime shoes have lost the rugged, sporty look that formerly characterized the appropriate footwear for tailored suits. Smart, soft-toed models, many of them made with elastic insets and gores, mould the foot trimly. Others, constructed entirely of elastic leather, insure a streamlined silhouette, unmarred by gapping sides or fastenings that protrude.

These snug, form-fitting styles are as easy on the feet as bedroom slippers, partly because of their construction and partly because of their comfortable walking height heels covered with matching materials or built up of little uncovered layers that are nick-proof and resilient.

'Way Back When

By JEANNE

BETTE DAVIS WAS AN USHERETTE

LIFE has a strange way, sometimes, of repeating a circumstance from our previous struggles, as if to remind us that what may have once seemed a difficult trial was actually preparation for a later triumph. I am thinking, particularly, of Bette Davis and the marvelous performance she gave as the waitress, Mildred, in "Of Human Bondage."

Bette Davis was born in Lowell, Mass., in 1908. Her mother had only a small alimony with which to support Bette and her sister, so she became a professional photographer. After attending the Mary Arden school of Peterboro, N. H., Bette went to Cushing academy of Boston. There, she waited on tables to earn her tuition. To the sixteen-year-old little girl, whose dramatic ambitions made her super-sensitive to her role in life, her occupation as waitress was humilating.

ing in contrast to the advantages enjoyed by her fellow students. Miserable though her school days were, that occupation was to be the role of one of her greatest triumphs. Would Bette Davis have played such a convincing "Mildred" if circumstances had never forced her to be a waitress at school?

Recognition came to Bette Davis soon after school. She had always wanted to be an actress and her mother encouraged her, although her father thought she should take a business course in New York and prepare to be a stenographer. She attended a dramatic school in New York instead, and then obtained a job as an usherette in the Cape Playhouse of Cape Cod, Mass. Finally she was given a small part, and rose rapidly in the theater, going on to Hollywood where she rose to stellar heights in "Of Human Bondage." For her performance in "Dangerous" she received the Motion Picture award in 1935.

RADIO STAR RAN A CONCESSION

FORTUNE'S favorites do not always bear marks to distinguish them from her failures. Bob Burns, who with his "bazooka" has become nationally known for his radio broadcasts and motion picture work, for many years looked like a failure. He was born in Van Buren, Ark., in 1896, and was always fond of music. His first "bazooka" was a horn made from a piece of pipe welded to a funnel, because he had nothing else to play. After two years in college, he joined some friends in Oklahoma raising peanuts. Bob gave that up to go back to Van Buren where he joined a minstrel troupe at three dollars a week. He tried to get a theatrical job in New Orleans, next he tried New York, with no luck, and went to Little Rock, Ark. There, he failed at trying to sell advertising on commission.

During the World war, Bob Burns was in the marines, was a crack rifle shot, and entertained the soldiers with his "bazooka." After the war, he started a concession on the boardwalk at Atlantic City, running a game of chance. He married a girl who worked in another concession and, together, they started a dance hall; but it failed. Failure after failure. And in the midst of his troubles, his son was born.

But then Bob Burns got a job in vaudeville, and in a few short years he was at the top of the entertainment world, with contracts for stage, motion pictures, and radio. His "bazooka" in which he had such faith, but which seemed such hopeless comedy to many people, is with him today and known all over the country.

Household Questions

Potatoes for Short Cakes.—Hot, boiled and mashed white potatoes are good in making short cakes and puddings. They not only save flour, but require less shortening.

Cleaning Enameled Sinks.—Those stubborn dark streaks which accumulate on enameled sinks and bathtubs can be removed with kerosene.

When Peeling Small Onions.—Cover small onions with hot water and let stand for a minute or two and the skins are easily removed.

Strain the Starch.—Starch used in laundering should be strained to remove all lumps that might blister when ironing.

Johnny Cake.—One cup yellow corn meal, one cup bread flour, one-third cup sugar, one and one-half cups sour milk, half teaspoon soda, half teaspoon baking powder, one teaspoon salt. Mix and sift the dry ingredients twice, and gradually add the sour milk. Beat well, and bake in a shallow greased pan, in a moderate oven. WNU Service.

APPLE CARTS ON PARADE

THERE'S no doubt about it—the wheels of the political apple-carts are getting an early greasing and oiling this year for the 1938 campaigns!

But if New York's recent mayoralty primary is a prophecy of the future, policies of candidates may soon count more than their party affiliations. In that primary, Republicans, Socialists and Communists marched to the polls—and voted for the same candidate! And the Democratic nominee had to run his campaign without benefit of Tammany because it was busily, but vainly bolstering up its erstwhile Republican nominee!

New York's crazy-quilt political pattern may point to a significant trend—that voters are becoming more concerned with the merit of programs than with party labels. This is an important development in our political life, because voters will be called upon within the next two years to make extremely vital decisions. They may, in fact, have to determine whether it is America's destiny to remain a free, competitive Democracy or to become a nation of state capitalism with politicians in full command of everything.

During the past ten years there's been a sharp trend toward more and more regulation of business. In that time hundreds of bills were enacted into law by state and national legislatures, hamstringing big and little business alike. Business, like football, has rules and must have an umpire. But if the present trend continues, businessmen will have to spend all their time in lawyers' offices trying to find out if the confused welter of politicians' rules has left them anything they CAN do without permission.

Voters henceforth will probably survey with increasingly skeptical eyes the wares on display in the political applecart!

A FAIR SHARE

AS STURDILY and steadily as Pilgrim's Progress, America's national income is marching gradually upward according to the most recent tabulations of the departments of commerce and agriculture.

Present predictions of these bodies estimate that the 1937 national income will reach $70 billions. This would be $8 billions more than last year, and $11 billions less than it was in the dazzling year of 1929 when all-time records—some of them not so cheerful to remember—were set.

This year has been notable for the imposing strides made by Labor, which supplanted so well at the table of industry and agriculture that in 1937, predicts the department of commerce, Labor will receive the largest slice of national income on record.

Last year the nation's wage-earners garnered of 65 per cent of the national income, and this year's pay envelopes to workers in automobile, rail, and steel industries have grown even fatter. They will hoist the average per capita of all wage-earners to around $1300 for 1937. Last year's was $1244.

Hence, it's absurd that Labor's slice of the national income will undoubtedly swell to over 65 per cent this year. Is that a fair share? A few labor leaders think not, including those in the highest-paid industries such as rails, where a recent $98,000,000 wage-boost to non-operating workers is being followed by the demand of other brotherhoods for a $116,000,000 wage increase! In a natural desire to help themselves to more of that nice pie, labor leaders may overlook the fact that in all fairness there should be a reasonable share for the rest of the public, or else—prices must advance, the number of wage-earners must be cut, and everyone's share reduced.

Maybe John Bunyan's Pilgrim had the best idea. He made sound Progress because he was slow but sure-footed, considerate, and in no breakneck rush to get places regardless of the cost or consequence.

STRANGE PEOPLE, THESE!

IN THE autumn twilight of Berlin's tree-shaded boulevards a million people cheered two World war corporals last week. One of the corporals was Benito Mussolini and the other was Adolf Hitler.

It would be worth a great deal to know just what thoughts percolated through the heads of these two dictators who rose from the humble ranks of enemy armies to become masters of militarist nations, united at last against their common foe—Liberty and Democracy.

Did they happen to consider what a strange political animal the dictator is? Sitting opposite each other at the state banquet in the Berlin Reichs-Chancellery, did Hitler admit to himself that all his pompous preaching about the superiority of blonde Aryans over the brunet Mediterranean race, of which Mussolini is a member, was only political hokum?

Or when admiring Germany's military machine as it went through maneuvers for him on the shores of the Baltic last week, did Mussolini recollect that in 1914 his leather-lunged voice was raised in fiery protest against war machines as a monstrous evil?

CRIMINALS THINK BIG

THE recent kidnaping of a wealthy, retired manufacturer of Chicago, again indicates that in some criminal minds there exists a warped streak not even the threat of drastic punishment can suppress.

This streak which twists the minds of megalomaniacs, madmen, and most criminals, appears to be a delusion of grandeur complex, a false sense of power and brilliant cunning based on the bumptious premise, "Only stupid people get caught for committing crimes. I am not stupid—I am smart. Therefore, I will not get caught."

More important than whacking the heads off criminals in death chambers is for educators and hard-headed psychologists to seek the root of this twisted thinking. Then teachers can be equipped with methods of diverting this mad urge for notoriety and power into constructive, wholesome channels.

In making this review of the progress of today we desire to point to The San Jose Commercial Co. which is reading the trend of the times and is pointing the way to a happy home for the many.

SANTA CLARA COUNTY FIRE INSURANCE CO.

With home offices located in the Porter Bldg., San Jose, is this county's only home insurance company, and it is one of Santa Clara county's real assets. Prompt service is given both in writing insurance and paying losses.

This strong local company has quick assets (cash and bonds) in proportion to its liabilities, and the cash is deposited in Santa Clara county banks. No money is sent away to Hartford, New York, London or China. All reserves accumulated are invested for the upbuilding of the local community.

You know Benjamin Franklin and his friends formed the first fire insurance company in America—the Philadelphia Contributorship—a mutual fire company which is still operating. In fact, it is one of Pennsylvania's strongest financial institutions—and for 180 years it has written fire insurance at less than half of the customary charges of companies operating for a profit.

In California there are 22 county mutual companies—all strong, going concerns with total assets of over one and one-quarter million dollars with which to pay losses promptly, and the Santa Clara County Fire Insurance Company is one of these. This company has constantly forced fire insurance rates down, and its name has come to mean "Service—Safety—Saving."

Insure with the Santa Clara County Fire Insurance Company. Help yourself and your community. Telephone Ballard 8383.

John Bean Manufacturing Co.

Located at 217 Julian St., San Jose, Phone Col. 1500, John Bean Orchard Spraying Equipment and Irrigation Pumps are right in line with progress as they are manufacturing products of merit that are holding their well earned popularity. The name of John Bean Manufacturing Co. has long been associated with the great developments in agriculture in this entire territory. The experience of this firm is well established having originated in Los Gatos in the 80's.

Our people appreciate the way this firm meets their needs. Their spraying equipment and irrigation pumps on sale here lead the field. They offer the best of service in the way of a full line of parts for all their equipment and these are furnished at a minutes notice.

It is very important to buy local products and from manufacturers who specialize in this feature so that when it is necessary to get parts or help there is no delay as there would be from a distant center. Here is service at your very door.

John Bean Manufacturing Co. adds to the community's progress by offering products that give results and satisfaction. We highly recommend them to our readers.

WALTER H. BOYER Internal Baths and Massage

Located at 446 N. Fifth, San Jose, has the modern bath cabinets for internal baths. These health-giving treatments are very carefully administered here and can benefit most of the bodily ailments to which human flesh is heir. We would suggest that anyone who is not feeling the very best, go to Walter H. Boyer for a consultation. Tel. Col. 3436.

E. A. WELLER CO. Investments
Located in Bank of America Bldg., San Jose. Tel. Ballard 1042

The investment house of E. A. Weller Company maintains a statistical department for the exclusive purpose of analyzing securities.

It is constantly seeking out hidden values in order that they may be brought to the attention of their clients. This department will analyze investors' holdings and compile a report on the management, stability of earnings, intrinsic values, future prospects, etc., without obligations.

E. A. Weller Company's contention is that lack of this knowledge is probably the biggest single factor that contributes to investment losses. As timing of commitments is acknowledged by most authorities to be the most important factor in the supervision of security holdings it is readily seen that this department's services properly utilized would be of considerable value to the investing public.

This paper believes that the readers will find the members of this firm to be courteous and always willing to provide you with any information you may desire, either by telephone or mail. One of their representatives will call at your home upon request.

Talent Search At High School

By Don Martin

A school-wide search for talent is under way at Campbell high. The object of the hunt is to find a couple of vocalists, a trio, and other suitable entertainers to join the dance orchestra. Margaret Irones, orchestra leader, announced that anyone is eligible to enter the audition which is to be held soon. The pretty, dark-eyed, brunette leader of the Campbell Cavaliers expressed the belief that there is a lot of undiscovered musical talent at school which will be brought out by this interesting contest.

Just as soon as the orchestra is organized, it will play at noon dances which will be held Tuesdays and Thursdays in the annex, and at other student body dances.

Following are the "Cavaliers" for this year: Margaret Irones, director; Robert Nichols and Wilbur Gerrans, assistant directors; James Rambo, Harry Rediker, Gladys Hughes, Raymond Swanson, Howard Carpenter and Eldrid Harris.

Incorporation

eil last Monday night. This is 3 cents lower than the $1.51 rate of last year and the lowest in the city's history since its incorporation in 1912.

"With a steady increase in the assessed valuation of property within the city limits due to more and more building, especially in the number of new homes, the city council finds that it can consistently reduce the city tax rate."

LOS GATOS

Los Gatos, with a population of 3,500 and an assessed valuation of $3,196,357, was incorporated in 1887. It appears to the casual observer that like Sunnyvale Los Gatos can date the beginning of civic progress with the step of incorporation.

Heading the list of receipts in her current city budget is "Taxes, $31,114.29." Other interesting items of revenue are: from state "in lieu," $3,252.97; licenses, local business, $5,179.56; liquor licenses from state, $1,940.50; swimming pool, $2,555.55 (showing an actual profit of $220.91); fines, $2,967.50; state highway gas tax, $5,553.55; and other smaller items to total $59,360.09.

Those familiar with Los Gatos concede the excellence of her public services and government, the cleanliness of her streets, the efficiency of her police and fire departments, and the loveliness of her parks. The total cost of administering and maintaining the corporate property amounts to $57,451.25, and includes a long list of items.

Revealing excellent financial condition, the town statement for the year ending June 30, 1937, sums it up as follows:

Total expended, $57,451.25
Total bal. on hand July 1, 1936 $34,112.46
Received during the year 59,360.09

$93,472.55
Expended during year, 57,451.25

Bal. on hand 6-30-1937 $36,021.30

The foregoing information was compiled by Campbell's Committee Investigating Incorporation and is offered as a basis for conjecture on the part of those who are interested in the general idea and possibilities of incorporation.

Mrs. Lottie Miracle, who has spent the season at her summer home at State Line, Lake Tahoe, has come down to the lower levels for the winter. The trip down was made on clear highways but past snow-laden trees and whitened landscape.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

By DON MARTIN

FROSH WELCOMED

Principal Lloyd K. Wood cordially welcomed the freshmen at the student body meeting presided over by the new president, Frank Ono. Wood said that he hoped the new high school auditorium, which will seat over 1,000, will be completed in time for the June commencement exercises. Margaret Irones played "Whispers in the Dark" as a piano solo.

GIRL RESERVES MEET

Activity of the Junior-Senior Girl Reserves club was started at a meeting held at noon today. Mary Parker is president of the organization.

DANCING CLASS

Miss Luva Straton will again conduct a class in ballroom dancing in the annex this year. The fee for the ten lessons has not yet been announced. (It would be dear at any price!)

REFRIGERATION LECTURE

A lecture on air-cooling and refrigeration was given to students of science and biology in the study hall at second period Wednesday. Those who attended reported it was very informative.

JAPANESE CLUB

George Kurasaki was elected president of the Japanese club to succeed Jack Takayanagi who has transferred to another school. At the same meeting, which was held Friday, Ralph Horio was voted vice president.

ASSISTANT YELL LEADERS

Two of the school's most popular girls, Mary Parker and Olivia Grant, have been appointed to assist Frank Ono lead yells. They will lead the cheers at the football game that will be played with Mt. View here Friday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Lambert Skillman of Winchester road, whose home is opposite the "Mystery House," have gone east, expecting to be away some time and their house is occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth.

Mrs. R. B. Strong and two sons arrived recently from Colorado to join Mr. Strong, who has been here for some time. They are pleasantly located in the Theyson home on Winchester road near the M. E. Purmort ranch. The boys are enrolled in the Campbell school.

what Irvin S. Cobb thinks about:

Rivals for Nudism.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—I took part in a parade celebrating old days in California, riding in an ancient open carriage with our postmaster here—he calls Jim Farley "Jim"—and our congressman, who like practically all Democrats in good standing in the southern part of the state, craves to be the next nominee for governor.

If any more aspirants bob up, there won't be anybody left to vote for them. This certainly has been a banner year for oranges and candidates.

Our outfit got a lot of cheers from the crowds and a perfect ovation when passing a given point where the Elks also were giving away beer. All three of us felt pretty proud of ourselves until we realized that probably the applause wasn't meant for us. There must have been thousands in that crowd who'd never before seen a horse-drawn pleasure vehicle.

If Lady Godiva, dressed only in her long hair, rode on a white horse through any modern city street, there'd probably be ten who'd hurrah for the horse against one who looked a second time at the lady. Sight of a white horse would be a treat to one and all, whereas in these days of nudism and public undressing on the beaches—but that will be about all for that.

International Messes.

WITH the great powers tottering on the brink of hostilities to a more tottery extent than usual; with the Spaniards still willing to fight to the last Italian from Brother Mussolini's loan collection; with China battered to a bloody hash-meat in what would closely resemble a war if only Japan had so declared it, which must indeed be gratifying to the ghosts of the thousands already slain and the homeless refugees from ruined cities—this seems a mighty good time for us to keep our shirt on.

Kindly recall that other historic occasion when Uncle Sam felt called upon to hop into a mess cooked up by foreign nations and, as a result, not only lost his shirt, but has never since been able to collect the laundry bills for washing the said shirt. This, if you get the drift, is a subtle reference to those defaulted European debts.

Let us, therefore, highly resolve that, no matter how great the pressure from within or without—mainly it'll be, as was the case before from without—we'll keep the old shirt on.

Classifying Bores.

I'VE been classifying bores. Class B bores are those still using the lapel clutch or buttonhole grapple, whereas a class A bore is one whose boast is that he never lays a finger on you—just holds the victim by psychic power.

Lately I've met what I should call a super A type, the same being a gentleman who, in addition to having perfect technique otherwise, had been imbibing garlic to excess—and didn't care who knew it. When finally rescued, they had to use a pulmotor on me.

Meeting this champion reminded me of what I heard the late Wilson Minzer say to a gentleman who insisted on boring Wilson while suffused with the afterglow brought on by combining bourbon whiskey and Bermuda onions in his diet. His hiccougs were not only frequent but had echoes to them.

Finally, when Wilson was practically ready for artificial respiration to be applied, he said:

"Dear sir, your breath would start the windmills turning in an old Dutch painting."

Typical Texans.

I USED to think a typical Texan was one who said he was going to send you a ten-gallon hat and then didn't do it. But he is a sub-species.

A really orthodox Texan tells you he's giving you a pair of genuine Texas steer horns. They'll be along as soon as he can have them shipped. But he never ships 'em—that's what makes him typical.

So many typical Texans have volunteered to send me sets of long horns that, if all these parties were laid end to end, you'd have one of the finest consecutive strings of born liars ever seen. But they wouldn't stay that way; they'd rise right up and start looking for Easterners to promise long horns to.

Not that I'm craving any long horns. They stretch so far from tip to tip they make you think of a muskellunge fisherman trying to show you how much that biggest one measured. If you hang them low, they prong people in the eye. If you hang them high, they're chiefly useful for cobwebs to drape on. And no self-respecting wife will let you hang them anywhere.

Not satisfied with present-day aircraft, R. Passat, center, of Surbiton, England, invented this new-type flying machine which he claims is inspired by action of birds in flight. Wings of the "Lark," as he calls it, are covered on the underside with a gauzy material which is said to catch the air like the feathers of a bird in flight.

GOOD MANAGEMENT TO INCREASE EGGS

Early Preparation Must Be Made for Pullets.

By Roy S. Dearstyne, Head Poultry Department, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

The poultryman who has a well managed flock is the poultryman who will receive the biggest returns from the fall increase in egg production.

Pullets should be ready for the laying house in early fall. The house should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected before the birds are placed inside. Broken window panes should be replaced, and if drop curtains are used on open-front houses, these should be checked for needed repairs.

Cull all pullets carefully. Market all sub-normal birds, especially those with excessive bleaching of shank and face parts. These birds are usually carriers of coccidiosis.

Do not change pullets from growing mash to laying mash until they have reached 25 per cent production. Then change the mash gradually over a period of two weeks.

Don't buy cheap mash—it is the most expensive in terms of results produced for money spent. Keep a good grade of mash before layers at all times. See that they have plenty of fresh water.

Practice rigid sanitation to keep the death rate down. Keep accurate records on the flock. Without records the poultry business is a hit-or-miss affair—mostly miss.

Good breeding males are essential but scarce. If these have not been secured, get them at once.

Early fall is a good time to plant grazing crops. A mixture of Italian rye grass and crimson clover will provide excellent winter and spring grazing.

Soy Meal Chick Feed Is Recommended in Rations

Since soybean oil meal has become such an important factor in poultry rations, due to its economy as protein carrier, it is worth noting the results of experiments at the University of Wisconsin, says the Country Home Magazine. An all-mash ration containing 12 parts soybean meal, to two parts meat scrap, and two parts dried milk plus minerals (in 100 parts) was better than one containing 16 parts soybean meal plus minerals, as measured in weight of chicks at 8 and 20 weeks, and in feed consumed for gains made.

Another ration consisting of 12 parts soy meal, two parts meat scrap and two parts dried milk plus minerals (in 100 parts) was not so effective as one containing eight parts meat scraps and eight parts dried milk, when measured at eight weeks, but was about as good at 20 weeks. The 12-2-2 ration (above) was about equal to one with eight parts soy meal, four parts meat scraps and four parts dried milk plus minerals and one with eight parts meat scraps and eight parts milk at 20 weeks of age. With laying pullets at 11 months various combinations of soy meal with meat scraps and dried milk plus minerals gave good egg production and were better than when the sole source of protein was soybean meal.

Poultry Needs Pure Water

One of the greatest sources of infection of bacterial diseases of poultry occurs while the birds are allowed access to the poultry run or range, is their habit of drinking water from puddles which form in the low places after a heavy rain. Such water is usually teeming with bacteria and offers one of the most dangerous sources of infection. Particularly is this true in the case of coccidiosis. Keeping the birds confined after each rain until all puddles have dried up or filling in the small hollows on the range so that the water will not accumulate is the best means of preventing this danger.

Prontylin

Prontylin, the magic drug that has startled the medical world by quickly eliminating streptococcus infections in man, is now being tested with cows to clear up udder infections with mastitis, and encouraging results are being secured. Dr. Lowell Erf of Cincinnati suggested the idea to his father, Prof. Oscar Erf of Ohio State university, who is now testing it on more than 100 cows. Some cows, where the mastitis is due to streptococcus infection, have later been reported negative.—Farm Journal.

Confining Poultry

Trim the tips of chickens' wings, perhaps one wing more than the other, to keep them from flying over the fence, is the advice of the Indiana Farmer's Guide. Uneven trimming will unbalance the bird when an attempt to fly is made. Very little of the wing needs to be taken off to stop this practice and little attractiveness of the bird will be lost. This suggestion is the most economical and practical for the poultryman.

A Late One

"Exactly, sir, she is making her first parachute jump."

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

Behind Marian's shadowed silhouette the window glass itself shattered, as if it had exploded inward; out in the brush sounded the ringing crack of a rifle. Then there was silence and the window against which Marian had stood was empty except for the lamp-lit gleam of its shattered glass.

Wheeler's breath jerked in his throat; he dropped to the ground and raced for the house.

In the dark beside the shattered window Douglas was holding the girl in his arms, and though she clung to him, Wheeler saw that the wagon boss was holding her up. He heard Douglas say, "Are you hurt? Are you—"

Billy Wheeler cried out, "In God's name, Marian—"

Marian's voice said shakily, "I'm all right."

"You hit?"

"No."

"Get a gun!" said Val Douglas crazily. "We was standing here, and somebody took a shot at—"

Wheeler turned and ran for the bunk house. Half way he almost crashed into Tulare Callahan.

"What's up?"

"Get the boys out," Wheeler told him. "To hell with saddles, but get ropes and guns. Somebody fired into the layout—we've got to try to stampede over him in the brush."

Behind the 94 layout the buck-brush stood ragged, much of it shouldered high to a mounted man; in its crooked brakes the hard sandy ground showed barren in the light of the near stars.

With some difficulty Billy Wheeler restrained Gil Baker and Steve Hurler from spurring their ponies head-long into the brush, as if they were trying to jump a bunch of steers.

"Stick together, move slow, and keep stopping to listen," Wheeler said. "That's our only chance."

They trailed into the brush slowly, single file, Wheeler in the lead. He had accidentally mounted a horse that believed in ghosts and it moved sidelong, stretching its nose warily at the brush shadows, blowing long uneasy whoofs. Repeatedly they halted to sit listening.

For an hour they combed the dark brush, alternately walking their horses and listening.

Not until they came out at the foot of a barren rise did they realize that they had wandered almost a mile from their starting point. When you have seen one thicket of buck-brush by starlight you have seen them all. They had pushed through a hundred thickets, in which a man could have hidden under the very feet of their horses—yet in that mile of country there were a thousand thickets more. The riders were grim and tight-mouthed.

Horse Dunn met them at the corals. He had been prowling all over the place, rifle on his arm. He spoke low-voiced, but no one of them say something, so he said the first thing came into his head. Every sign we got points to the fact that Lon Magoon was killed, in his own saddle, and on his own horse, and at Short Crick."

"I'm thinking now," said Billy Wheeler, "that we can prove that one way or the other—right here and now."

"How?"

"We've still got his saddle, haven't we?"

"It's still under my bunk."

"Let me see it."

Horse Dunn stared at him irritably for a moment, then picked up a lamp with a jerk, and led the way to the clean bare room in which he lived. By the yellow light of the lamp the fine old saddles on their racks against the wall glistened cleanly from silverwork and steel. Dunn sat down on a box and hooked his elbows on the table behind him.

"Horse, how big a man is this Lon Magoon? About my size?"

"Hell, no! Not by eight inches. Little short wiry feller—put you in mind of a grasshopper, or a flea."

Wheeler hauled out Magoon's saddle. Billy measured the length of the stirrup leather with his arm—stirrup in armpit, fingers upon the tree.

"I stand five-eleven," Wheeler said. "Yet these stirrups are too long for me to ride. Horse, the man that rode this saddle was over six feet tall."

Horse came across the room in two strides and dropped to one knee beside Billy. "Damn it, I know that's Magoon's hull!"

"You mean it was Magoon's hull. You can see the short-rig bends worn into the stirrup leathers. But since then the leathers have been let down long, and laced there with rawhide whang."

Horse Dunn measured the stirrup leathers against his own arm. Then he forked the saddle where it lay, jamming his feet into the stirrups. "Tall as me," he breathed, unbelieving. He stared at the saddle incredulously for several moments. "Do you reckon," he said at last, "that infernal old lion hunter would let down those stirrups, just to get us balled up?"

"Look at the wear on the stirrup leather. The saddle has been ridden since the stirrups were let down."

Horse Dunn got up slowly and went back to his seat on the box. For a long time he sat staring at the floor. When at last he drew a deep breath and got up, his movements were those of a man pre-occupied.

He got out a roll of adhesive tape, pulled off a boot and woolen sock, and began to tape up the outside of his ankle bone, which appeared to be skinned. "I've got to take a hammer to those spurs," he said, his mind on other things. "Seems like they—"

"Horse—Coffee was right! The man that died in this saddle was not Lon Magoon."

Suddenly Dunn stood up, a shaggy towering figure, staring redly at Billy Wheeler. "Then, in God's name, who's dead?"

Wheeler regarded him without expression. Within the hour, a shadowy hunch had come over him. He knew that he had no proof for the thing that was in his mind; yet somehow it stood clear and plain. He went to the fireplace, and picked up an old branding iron that had been in use as a fire poker. He squatted on his heels, and with this sooty iron began to make marks on Dunn's clean-swept floor.

"Saying that the 94 is here," he said, marking a cross, "and Short Crick over here; then here lies that broken badlander called the Red Sleep. Seems to me there used to be a trail across the Red Sleep, leading over to Pahranaagat."

"Yes, sure. But—"

Horse Dunn waited; Billy Wheeler studied the floor. "Where would a man be coming from, passing over Short Crick toward the 94? Maybe—Pahranaagat?"

"Could," Horse admitted dubiously.

"That little railroad spur ends there."

"Sometimes," Horse Dunn made a sudden contribution, "Lon Magoon has shipped a few stolen beef carcasses out of Pahranaagat."

Wheeler nodded. "From Pahranaagat the spur runs down the Little Minto to Plumas, then—let me see—"

"Cheat Creek, Monitor, Sikes Crossing," Dunn supplied; "and so to the main stem."

"And so to the main stem," Wheeler repeated. "And maybe an old-timer, a saddle man, working toward the 94 by train, would figure it was better to come by Pahranaagat—and there pick up a horse?"

They were silent, and the background of the outer night seemed uncommonly still—perhaps because Old Man Coffee's hounds were gone.

"A saddle-minded man," Wheeler repeated, "coming from—say—Flagstaff." He threw the branding iron into the fireplace; it sent up a puff of white ash, against the black opening. "Horse, where was Bob Flagg last heard from?"

Dunn's voice came out thickly. "Flagstaff," he said.

CHAPTER IX

Horse Dunn sat relaxed, staring morosely at the floor. In his eyes a dark fire glowed. Wheeler wondered what ugly and shadowy things the old man was seeing. Perhaps, Wheeler thought, he would not wish to see in his life the like of what Horse Dunn was seeing, as he sat looking at the floor.

Finally Horse Dunn jerked to his feet with an abrupt impatience. "This is all pipe smoke," he said. "For a minute you threw me up in the air with that bunk. But hell! You figure Bob come here a way no man would ever think of coming. There's better than a hundred million people in this country, and Bob Flagg is one of 'em, so you figure that maybe it was him got killed!"

"Well, we might anyway check up at Pahranaagat. There isn't so much travel up the Little Minto but what we could find out if Bob Flagg came that way."

"I'll send Val Douglas over there tomorrow. I sure don't aim to leave any stone unturned. But if a guess is an inch long, you sure jumped a mile."

"Maybe," Wheeler admitted.

Horse Dunn took a turn of the room and the fighting spirit that had flared up in his eyes burned low and smoky again. "This country's gone to hell in a handbasket. I've never asked for any more than justice, and I've dealt out nothing less. But where can you get it now? A man's hands are tied. There was more honesty in the old six-gun than in a thousand courts of so-called law. I'd give 'em their cock-eyed country. I'd wash my hands of the whole works, and good riddance—if it wasn't for the girl."

It always came back to Marian. The old man didn't dare lose because of what it meant to the girl; he had labored for her too long, in years that for any other man would have been the twilight years of his life.

She came before Wheeler's eyes now, between himself and Horse Dunn, almost as clearly as if she had really been in the room.

Dunn was saying, "Know what I'd like to do? I'd like to cut out for the Argentine. Where a man's cows have a chance to turn around, by God. I'd—"

"Argentine, hell!" Billy exploded at him. "If I'd been running this outfit, this situation would never have come up or started to come up!"

"I suppose you'd have sold out," Dunn said, a hard edge on his voice.

"Maybe and maybe not. But I wouldn't have gone cow crazy, range crazy, until I couldn't afford to work my stock!"

Strangely, Horse did not anger. Wheeler saw that the Old Man thought his tirade was merely based on youth and ignorance, which he had seen in unlimited quantities before.

"Maybe," Dunn said now, "you'd have kept the 94 a little one-horse spread—in the best of shape. But that ain't the question now. We're where we are, and there's no use fighting over what went before."

"I can save it yet," Wheeler told him rashly. "I can throw a hundred thousand into the 94."

"I didn't know you could swing that much. You got it, Billy?"

"What I haven't got of it—I can get."

Horse Dunn studied him, sadly, a long time. "That's an offer, is it?" he said at last.

"On one condition. That you give me a free hand, to hire, fire, buy or sell, land or cattle, for three years."

"I believe," said Dunn, "I'd even do that."

"It's a deal, then?"

"No! You and me'll never make a deal like that!"

"It's your out," Wheeler told him, "and it's your only out. Let me take the finance and the outfit—and all the other ruction falls to pieces."

And now Horse Dunn's eyes blazed again, and his voice crackled. "You'll never put a dime in this brand!"

"It's her brand," Wheeler reminded him. "You willing to let it bust up and go down, and the girl and her mother without a cent?"

"Let 'er bust—before it ever hangs on your dough!"

"But damnation—why?"

"You want to know why? I'll tell you why! Because you want that girl! You want that girl—you think I'm blind? But she don't want you."

"Isn't This Pretty Early? Couldn't You Sleep?"

I'd no sooner put her in your debt than I'd sell her to you outright. You're only making the offer because you're in love with Marian."

"You're crazy! I'm making the offer because I think I can come out on it."

"You want the girl," Horse persisted.

"You old fool—" Wheeler held his voice down—"do you think I'd ever expect to get her that way? Do you think I'd want her on the basis of—"

"Anyway, that's all over and done, two years back," Wheeler lied. "Once she could have had me body and soul. But that's all over. I wouldn't tie myself up, not now, to her or anyone else."

"You lie," said Horse calmly. "Horse, if you'll let me take—"

"Never a dime of your money in her brand," Horse said with utter finality.

Wheeler turned in that night feeling old and grim.

It was still dark as Billy Wheeler let himself noiselessly into the cook shack and lighted a lamp. He found himself cold biscuits; and in a huge pot on the back of the stove he found bitter coffee above a banked fire.

He had about finished washing down his cold biscuits when he was annoyed to discover that another early riser was about. Someone was walking quietly toward the cook shack. Hurriedly he blew out his light, gulped down half a cup of dregs, and let himself out of the kitchen, anxious to be on his way without conversation.

Then, rounding the corner of the cook shack he almost ran into Marian.

"Morning, Billy." He saw that she was wearing belted overalls and boots.

"Isn't this pretty early? Couldn't you sleep?"

Fall Fashion Parade

BE THE first to wear the new

Fall fashions in your group—let Sew-Your-Own help you to step right out in front, in the parade of new Fall Fashions. Today's trio gives you wide choice. Your first occasion frock if you are young and slim is a good looking basque model; for run-around a pretty yoke model that is as easy to make as it is to wear; and if you are full bodied a jabot model that takes away inches.

The Popular Basque Dress.

If you are twenty or thereabouts, you'll adore this pretty basque dress with its flaring skirt. The slim wasp waist and short puffed sleeves above a swing skirt are as young as the morning. Have it in a pretty dark print banded in velvet ribbon for every afternoon festivity. It's a dress that you'll wear all through the winter.

Yoke-Style House Frock.

Every woman will be quick to see the advantages of this frock, in style and wearability. The round yoke buttons at front and gives a fresh, young look to this design. Best of all, it is cut in one piece from neck to hem so that you can make it in practically no time at all. The waistline is darted for snug fit. You'll look and feel years younger in this model—wear it 'round the house and for afternoon, too.

Look Slim and Sleek.

The newest fashions give you a slim, sleek look even if you are not blessed with a svelte figure. The jabot model in the illustration is designed to make even the woman who is a bit on the plump side look sleek and inches slimmer. Make this dress in one of the new thin wools and see how you'll stand out in your crowd as a fashion leader.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1257 is designed for sizes 12 to 40. Size 14 requires 4½ yards of 39 inch material and 11 yards of ribbon to trim.

Pattern 1380 is designed for sizes 34 to 48. Size 36 requires 4½ yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1373 is designed for sizes 34 to 50. Size 36 requires 3¾ yards of 54 inch material and ¾ yards of 39 inch material for jabot in contrast.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 149 New Montgomery Ave., San Francisco, Calif. Patterns 15 cents (in coins) each.

would have crossed him then, any more than they would have fooled with a 14-hand silvertip. His words came out as hard as pieces of rock.

"Go on and turn in," he told them.

"This is most likely all for tonight."

Once they were inside, Horse demanded of Wheeler, "What the devil got into Old Man Coffee?"

"Whatever it was got into him, it's going to cost us plenty."

"I don't believe he knows a horse track from a hound's ear," Dunn declared angrily. "He puts me in mind of some old moss-horn—he paws and blows and hollers, but what's he know about it when he gets through? Nothing."

"I'm not so sure," Billy Wheeler said.

"Name one thing he found out!"

"He figured out that the murdered man was not Magoon."

Horse snorted in disgust. "I don't believe it. Coffee thought he had to

Azaleas of the South Imported From France; Plant Brought From Toulouse

Azalea time in the deep South is one of great joy and exquisite beauty, writes Annabella Neusbaum in Nature Magazine. When the azaleas, evergreen shrubs of delicate foliage, burst their buds, masses of flowers cover the bush until, its foliage hidden, the entire plant is a glowing mass of living color.

The gracious charm of old Mobile, with her quaint old streets and spacious avenues lined with magnificent century-old live oaks and magnolias, provides a perfect setting for the azaleas and camellias. Today, Mobile has a beautiful "Azalea trail," a road some fifteen miles long that leads one through streets literally banked with these flowers. The plants range from two to twenty feet in height, the reigning color being a glorious deep pink.

The history of the azaleas is closely interwoven with the romantic history and tradition of the old South.

They came to the New World shortly after Bienville founded Mobile in 1711. From old family records we find that Francois Ludgere Diard, native Mobilian and direct descendant of one of the original settlers, returned to France to visit relatives in Toulouse. At the time of his visit the azaleas of southern France were blooming. He was so impressed with their dazzling splendor that on his return to the New World he brought home three varieties: a deep glowing pink known today as Pride of Mobile; a lavender-pink one, and a snowy-white one. Today, gorgeous specimens of these original plants can be seen in the oldest gardens—some of them perhaps a century and a half old, 20 feet high, and spreading out to a diameter of 100 feet. Now they are found all along the Gulf Coast from Texas to Florida, up the Atlantic seaboard to South Carolina.

Pedestrian Hit, Driver Not Held

Merle Shaves, driver of a car in which his sister, Lorraine, was a passenger was not held after an unfortunate accident last Saturday night in which H. R. Atkinson, a pedestrian was critically injured. As reported to a Press representative, Atkinson was walking in the center of Campbell avenue near Union when two cars approached. Both tried to avoid the unfortunate pedestrian, but he stumbled into the side of the Shaves car. Highway Patrolmen Mel Kent and Ray Berry reported that he suffered a torn back from a door handle, and a skull fracture. He was taken to the county hospital where his condition is reported as very serious. Miss Shaves was badly cut by flying glass, but Merle escaped with slight cuts.

FANCHON AND MARCO School Of The Theatre

123 S. Third, San Jose. Phone Col. 2977

The arrival of two new dancing instructors at the Fanchon and Marco School Of The Theatre brings an added touch of grandeur to the theatrical atmosphere prevailing in the studios of the San Jose branch of this famous school. Each a specialist of recognized ability and long experience in the entertainment field, Mr. Gordon Davis and Miss Joan Ardell come to San Jose from the southland, where they've held enviable positions as dancers and dancing instructors. Both have enjoyed the experience of stage and screen work and have also toured the country as headliners in Fanchon and Marco famous stage units and other stage productions. Miss Ardell's stage dancing at the Capitol Theatre in New York City and her work under Chester Hale, one of Hollywood's newest directors, has given her many laurels as mistress of ballet and as an exponent of modern ballet.

Her study of child psychology and wide experience as supervisor of the juvenile department of one of their larger studios in the south has earned for her an enviable reputation and the decided increase in the juvenile department in San Jose is indicative of Santa Clara Valley's appreciation of such an artist. Mr. Davis brings to Santa Clara Valley the exact type of new and up-to-date tap and acrobatic routine that he used in training many of Hollywood's picture luminaries and screen children. Voice, Drama and Radio are also taught at this world famous school under the direction of competent instructors. In this new era review we are pleased to compliment the splendid work of this school and suggest that it would be well for all younger people, especially, to secure training at the San Jose studio of the Fanchon and Marco School Of The Theatre.

I'M A NEW WOMAN. THANKS TO PURSANG
Yes, Pursang contains, in properly balanced proportions, such proven elements as organic copper and iron. Quickly stimulates appetite and aids nature in building rich, red blood even in cases of simple anemia. When this happens, energy and strength usually return. You feel like new. Get Pursang from your druggist.
